This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1866. Excerpt: ... THE ALPS OF HANNIBAL. PAET XII. CAUSE OF DOUBT. CONCLUSION. CHAPTER I. Doubt has come by neglect of Polybius. D'Anville failed, in ignorance of Polybius. Gibbon failed, in deference to D'Anville. Niebuhr did not fail.' Melville had unveiled the Truth: and De Luc had proclaimed it adding fresh light. One who has noted the phenomena of this controversy, may feel what has been said by Mr. Babbage concerning more serious inquiries--" It is a condition of our race, that we must ever wade through error in our advance towards truth." I would add that, when error has been surmounted, it is useful to account for its having existed. Prominent among the causes of failure in this long fought question, is found that disabling prejudice, the fear of difficulty. There has prevailed a sort of timid acknowledgment that it is full of difficulty and doubt: and this impression has dissuaded instead of stimulating the spirit of original search. Many a critic has known the Latin narrative of events rather than the Greek: and it has happened, that better men have adopted the doubts of their less competent predecessors. Doubt which originated in incompetence has thus become inveterate, engendering a general P2 persuasion that there is not intelligible evidence, and many, giving undue weight to prior opinions, have consented to blame the obscurity of truth, themselves making no effort to discern it. There has been no want of courage to embrace a theory first, and work up arguments for it afterwards, but great want of resolution for the independent purpose of sincere inquiry and interpretation. The subject has become one, in which a theory cannot be effectively enforced without fairly combating other theories: some writers abstain from the pugnacious effort; and this is no proof o...
